

Encouraging Food as Medicine

Request for Proposal

Background

As an organization committed, connected, and invested in our communities, Elevance Health and the Elevance Health Foundation are striving to improve the health of humanity by reducing racial injustice, strengthening our communities, and addressing health inequities in America.

The Elevance Health Foundation recently refined its strategy to underscore this commitment. Anchored by our vision of improving the health of the socially vulnerable through strategic partnership and programs in our communities, the strategy is rooted in demonstrating measurable impact in priority focus areas.

At Elevance Health, we take a broad view of health (e.g., social, clinical, and behavioral drivers) to improve lives of our consumers and communities—and, as such, we believe that food is medicine. Food insecurity, the lack of consistent access to healthy, nutritious food, is one of the most commonly reported unmet health-related social needs in the United States, with 40 percent of households reporting moderate to high levels of food insecurity. Consistent access to nutritious food is an essential part of maintaining a healthy, active lifestyle.

As a key pillar of this refined strategy, Elevance Health Foundation will build on its work in Food As Medicine by investing up to $30 million over the next three years to support programs that address food insecurity while helping individuals reach their full potential for good health through food and nutrition. We are inviting qualified nonprofit organizations with a history of proven, programmatic community initiatives to join us in these efforts.

In an effort to ensure our funding reaches the communities where it is needed most, we are placing an emphasis on programs specifically working to provide healthy and nutritious foods while preventing or addressing chronic conditions through Food As Medicine.
